Ceremony Types

All options are on this page. Please let us know if you have a different ceremony in mind. These listed are the most popular.

Religious or Traditional Religious Ceremony

Conducted by clergy, with the content determined by each denomination's liturgy, usually in a consecrated space. Ceremonies can vary widely, with the couple's country and culture of origin influencing the content. There are often religious requirements that must be met before a religious marriage ceremony can take place.

Non-Traditional Religious Ceremony

These ceremonies may modernize religious liturgy or symbols, and normally take place in non-consecrated locations. Some couples may utilize elements from multiple traditions in one ceremony or have friends and family members assist with officiation. This term may also refer to ceremonies performed in faiths that are considered outside the cultural and political mainstream.

"Spiritual but Not Religious" Weddings

The number of "nones" (that is, people who hold spiritual beliefs but are not affiliated with a religious denomination or community) has sharply risen since the turn of the century. Often defining themselves as "spiritual but not religious," couples who choose this type of ceremony usually derive content from the wisdom traditions and philosophical texts that have influenced their personal belief systems. Spiritual Humanist ceremonies may also fall under this category.

Non-Religious Weddings

The term "non-religious" applies to a wide range of ceremonies: spiritual in tone but not beholden to any specific religious dogma or ritual requirement; a ceremony with a humanist or romantic emphasis; an atheist wedding; or a civil ceremony.

Interfaith

Usually performed by non-denominational/interfaith clergy; in some instances, two clergy members of different faiths create and conduct the wedding cooperatively. Incorporates elements honoring both families' traditions and cultures and may include secular material at the discretion of the couple/officiating clergy.

Culturally-based Ceremonies

Culturally-based ceremonies derive their content from a couple's national, ethnic, or cultural origin. Often, cultural weddings are performed separately from a civil, religious, or more "mainstream" ceremony; sometimes cultural rites are melded into an inclusive traditional or modern ceremony.

Custom (or "Bespoke") Wedding Ceremony

Couples work with a writer or an officiant to create a one of a kind ceremony based on their values and style. Custom ceremonies may be completely unique or interlace classic and modern wedding elements into the couple's chosen narrative. Personal vows and participation by friends and family members are two practices frequently seen in custom ceremonies.

Simple Wedding Ceremony

In keeping with the tenets of "voluntary simplicity" (consciously forgoing conspicuous consumerism in order to reduce impact on the environment, support sustainable businesses, and increase a spiritual sense of existence) a couple may choose to keep wedding-related spending and products to a minimum. Flowers, food, and location are often provided cooperatively by friends and family. Simple weddings seek to create a sense of community and emphasize the meaning of the wedding ritual over material trappings and pageantry.

Theme Wedding Ceremony

Theme weddings are fun and memorable. Themes can be derived from almost anything: historical recreation, vintage wardrobe, art, film/literature/television, music, hobbies, and more. Locations may be made central to a theme—beaches, rodeos, gardens, circuses, monuments, museums— as well as holidays or hobbies. Themes infuse the ceremony material as well as reception decor and activities.

Commitment Ceremony

A non-legally binding ceremony to express and confirm love and faithfulness between two people who cannot or do not wish to legally marry. They have no set format or requirements.
